In order to avoid my attracting notice and running the risk of being arrested also, she had forbidden me to ask for anything for her, and opposed herself determinedly to any plan of entreating her liberation 1 I do not think I need to apologise for repeating myself on this theme. My readers have only to put themselves in my place; they will readily understand how my love and deep veneration lead me to insist on the praise due to this most praiseworthy woman. which might have brought me before the authorities. The bitterness displayed against my father was so great that she dreaded lest the same blind fury should fall on me; she desired that I should remain unnoticed, unknown. As to herself,...
